

Wandering Resident Management Solution

How much of your staff time, effort and budget is spent keeping track of wandering residents?

Caring for residents in long term health care facilities who suffer from Alzheimer's or other dementia is a very difficult task. Uncontrolled wandering exposes residents to possible life-threatening dangers. Such approaches as physical and chemical restraints are often inappropriate for residents suffering from dementia, and unselective door alarms are often missed because of their unreliability in notifying of a valid wanderer situation.

The solution to wanderer problems is a monitoring system with selective locking features which provides maximum, worry-free protection against wandering incidents. The Alliance monitoring system protects against uncontrolled wandering of dementia affected residents yielding effective, reliable detection which improves resident care and provides peace of mind to relatives, staff, and management.

Here's how it works — residents who wander are provided with small tags which activate several options if the resident tries to exit a protected door. Each door can be equipped with an alarm which sounds if the door is opened, or the door can be equipped with a magnetic lock which activates when the wanderer approaches. This prevents the door from being opened by the wanderer. Non-wanderers, staff members, and visitors move freely without being restricted by locked doors or sounding alarms.

With the Alliance monitoring system, time now spent keeping track of wandering residents is better utilized. Staff effectiveness and morale is improved because concern about residents being exposed to potential danger is reduced. The system allows the dignity and independence of residents to be preserved while at the same time providing the highest standards of care and safety.
